Foreign Mission Board Auxious About Its Missionaries. Church Notes.

A letter was received yesterday morning by Mr. W. C. Bentley from Rev. F. F. Reese, who has recently been called to St. Paul's. Mr. Reese states that if nothing unforeseen happens he will arrive in Richmond next Saturday afternoon, and Sunday occupy the pulpit at St. Paul's. Mr. Reese has not yet given his answer in regard to the call, but it is generally believed he will accept.

ANXIETY FELT.

There is a very painful anxiety in the minds of the members of the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention in this city, about the missionaries minds of the members of the Foreign Misslon Board of the Southern Baptist Convention in this city, about the missionaries of that Board in China. The Board has no missions in Pekin, which is at present the centre of disturbance, but it has missionaries in Tung-Chow, Hwang Hien and Ping Tu, in Northern China, where the insurrectionists are doing their worst work. Special concern is felt for Dr. J. B.
Hartwell and wife, Miss Annie Hartwell, Miss Lottie Moon, J. C. Owen and Miss Mattie Dutton, at Tung Chow.

Miss Dutton left this city only about five months ago for that mission. Up to this inc, the Board has received no message on any of its China missionaries since the insurrection began.

It seems very probable that some of them have been or will soen be, the victims of the "Boxers."

JUSTICE JOHN A Letter Telling Him There Was No Wedding.

CUPID TRICKS

PIANO PLAYING NOT WORK-

Luther Edwards Was Systematically Robbing His Employer and Was Caught Red-Handed and Receives Full Punishment.

The Police Court docket yesterday was as short as a sleepy boy's prayer, and except for the small talk and criticisms of the Great Law Giver the crowd would have felt they hadn't got their money's worth.

The Great Dispenser was in a fine good humor yesterday. He shelled the woods all the way down-town for the enemy, but every proposition met a second, and he reached the temple of justice with not a hair turned the present was a second. hair turned the wrong way.

BADLY BEAT.

He came upon the bench, however, rather more thoughtful than merry. Cupid, the saucy, deceitful little wretch, had played him a trick.

Justice John is something of a match-maker; indeed, he takes pride in the number of matches he has made in his official career, and you would think from his decisions sometimes, that he thinks marriage an estate only slightly removed from Eden. And as for family reconciliations, he grows eloquent when he talks about the broken domestic bonds that he has patched up and mended in his time.

CANNOT CONTROL CUPID.

"Once get 'cm tled and I know what to do with 'em." says the Great Lawgiver.

But Cupid is a slick little rascal, with as many minds as a party manager, and the Great Dispenser owes him several beats.

NOT A WEDDING.

The other day he dismissed a case against James Burch for trespass on the premises of Mrs. Margaret Strain because there was love in the case, and Miss Mary against James Burch for trespass on the premises of Mrs. Margaret Strain because there was love in the case, and Miss Mary Lizzie Strain sided with her lover against her mother and her brother and declared they would make a home of their own.

The Great Dispenser gave them his congratulations and sent them on their way, footing as beauty as a man who had made eiling as happy as a man who had made million-dollar endowment to a public library.

But there's many a slip between the cup and the lip, and the Great Dispenser had just received a note from Miss Mary. Lizzle Strain, saying she wanted him an world to know she is not married yet the world to know she is not married yet. Of course there is another chapter to the romance, but it is yet unwritten in the records of the Great Dispenser.

That was why he was solemn when he came upon the bench and roasted one of his best friends for not being in court exactly on time, and with fine sarcasm expressed the hope that he attended to his own business more promptly than he did the courts the courts.

LITTLE FIGHTERS. Andrew Tolver (colored) was charged with threatening to cut with a knife Jas. Crown. They are both boys of the age that in these days seem naturally to satisfy their anger with a knife. Andrew was fined $5 and went to jail in default.

Moses Banks (colored), also of tender age, resented the words of some other boys with a club, which he hurled into the crawd.

He was fined $1.50, which was paid by his mother with a whole week's washing. There was a lively seance in her back yard when she got Moses home. Frank Brown (colored) was charged with seing a suspicious character. He was ar-rested on the complaint of a woman for stealing. FLOOD HAS A GOOD LEAD.

His Friends Confident, But the Other Candidates Seem Equally So.

The election of delegates to the Buena Vista Convention, to nominate a candidate for Congress in the Tenth District, is altogether one-sided so far. Three countle have chosen their delegates, and all have instructed for Senator H. D. Flood. These are as follows: Appoint ox, 9; Bucking-ham, 12; Alleghany, 7. Total, 28. Highland was to have elected yesterday. It is probable that Judge Quarles will get the six votes from this county.

The friends of Senator Flood are jubi-lant over his lead, and are claiming that his chances of success are looking up.

A prominent Tenth District Democrat said yesterday that he thought it began to look like Flood was a winner, and that he could get the nomination this year he would surely be returned to Congress.

The friends of the other candidates, however, do not seem at all willing to concede the honor to the Appomattox man, and say that the developments of the next weeks will tell a different tale. They say there was never any doubt about his getting the twenty-eight votes he has already secured, and the announcement has not rattled the other aspirants in the least. Judge W. G. Loving's backers are confidently claiming Amherst and Nelson for their favorite, and should the Judge come up to their expectations, he will walk into the fight next Saturday week with thirty-three votes behind him, thus putting him very close to Mr. Flood, meanwhile Fluanna will give her nine votes to the latter gentleman on Tuesday next, thus placing his strength up to that time at thirty

Then with Judge Quarles and Colonel Catlett in the race, with strong following, the contest does not appear to be settled by any means. The Buena Vista Convention, which meets on the first day of August, promises to be the hottest ever held in the district. Funeral Services.

BLOWS IN THE GILLIGAN TRIAL

He said the argument would last at least several hours and the jury would be more pleasant outside the room. The jury was taken out and the lawyers con-jury was taken out and the lawyers consulted. It was agreed that the side which objected to the other's instructions should have the opening and closing.

Colonel Boykin took the floor and said the lawyers decided there was no stated rule in Virginia for the adoption of interesting but the allorneys agreed on structions, but the attorneys agreed on their plans. Colonel Boykin began reading he State's instructions and a record was kept of these, to which the defense objected. THE INSTRUCTIONS.

When he was through, Colonel Baker read the instructions for the defense. read the instructions for the defense. Nearly all of the instructions offered by prosecution were objected to, and the defense moved to have theirs substituted. The defense read gixteen instructions, seven of which the prosecution opposed.

The first prosecution-instruction offered was argued in reference to lying in wait.

was argued in reference to lying in wait. Colonel Boykin claimed there was evidence of lying in wait and the cared not how strong it was for the purpose of the present argument. The defense offered another in its place.

Judge Hinton opposed the instruction because it was abstract, mentioned poison and because he denied there was evidence to show there was lying in wait, contending that the prisoner borrowed a gun to hunt with the next day and he could have shot Mr. Turner earlier in the night had shot Mr. Turner earlier in the night had he wished to.

he wished to.

The prosecution did not object to the substitute offered and said they could be taken together.

HOMICIDE A NECESSITY. The principal argument came from the instruction requested by the prosecution, which provides that the defendant must show that the homicide was a necessity to save his own life and that this necessity must have come from no misconduct of his own and that it did arise from his misconduct; that he fairly declined an encounter or retreated as far as possible before the homicide happened. With this there was coupled another instruction to the effect that if Gilligan was upon the premises and with a shot-gun, compromisingly caressing the daughter of Mr. Turner, being aware that Mr. Turner would seriously object, and that Turner did come upon them and was killed by Gilligan, then he could not plead self-defense

BEYOND THE PALE.

The defense has instructions meant to cover the same points. Mr. Holland contended that when a man voluntarily trespassed and then added, the very grave in passed and then added, the very grave in-sult of compromisingly caressing a fe-male child, he put himself beyond the pale of self-defense. He should not be excused by any human or divine law. He held that this proposition ought to obtain in any country where virtue was not a discredit, and where men held sacred the chastity o their girl children.

The whole case depends largely on this instruction.
The prosecution claims that if Gilligan The prosecution claims that if Gilligan went on Mr. Turner's premises, knowing that the proprietor seriously objected and then put himself in a compromising attitude with his daughter, he put his own life in peril and could not plead self-defense even if his own confession were accepted as true.

accepted as true.
BEYOND THE PALE. Court convened after dinner, and the argument was continued on the instructions offered by the prosecution, which put (Gilligan beyond the pale of self-defence, because of his own misconduct in being on the deceased's premises and being caught in a compromising attitude with the de-ceased's daughter. Colonel Baker made the most eloquent talk which he has yet delivered. He claimtalk which he has yet delivered. He claimed that there was no uncompromising position except that a lover had his arm about the form of the young woman whom he adored. He contended there was no criminal act, and that the young woman is now as bright and as pure a virgin as the sun ever shone on.

ever shone on. Mr. Edwards argued that the instruc ever shone on.

Mr. Edwards argued that the instructions, if granted, would mean that the prisoner has no standing in court, and the evidence would result in naught.

NO UNLAWFUL PURPOSE.

Edwards claimed that Gilligan did not go to Mr. Turner's premises for an unlawful purpose, but to see his sweetheart, the one he loved. He claimed if every man who meets his sweetheart clandestinely, it may be at night, be put on the same footing, the law of self-defence may as well-be wiped out. He informed the court his old age kept him from realizing the situation as well as younger men could.

Colonel Boykin opened with "Old age will ne'er tame the Douglas blood." He claimed that the defendant was not entitled to the plea of self-defence when he himself was not without fault and brought it on himself. He said the defendant on himself. He said the defendant it on himself. He saw should have retreated. A GREAT PRINCIPLE. The speaker defied the lawyers to bring an authority which refuted the proposition, are authority which refuted the proposition, and exclaimed: "By the eternal Gods, there is no such principle in law or morals. There is a principle in human nature deep down in the heart which forbids it."

Colonel Boykin alluded to a Southampton case in which Lewis killed Newsome, ad in which case his distinguis Holland was counsel. He claimed that Gil figan could not avail himself of self-de-fence because he had brought the necessity on himself by caressing deceased's daugh ter, to which procedure he knew the deeased very much objected.

NO DECISION. Colonel Boykin acknowledged that had Turner killed Gilligan he would have been guilty of manslaughter, but that did not Gilligan.

After the personal encounter the settleent of the instructions under argument was postponed till to-morrow morning. Colonel Baker offered some instructions for the defence, and he and Colonel Boy-kin had a very quiet but able argument on the points involved. When court adjourned no single instruction had been passed on

If they further believed that the prisoner, immediately upon hearing said words of the deceased, and upon hearing the click of what he supposed to be a gun, and believing he saw a gun then and there, with his arm still around the waist or body of said daughter, and her arm around his neck, shot the deceased, and thereby gave him a mortal wound, of which he died.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

Two Virginia Republican Factions at Philadelphia.

NORFOLK, VA., June 21.—Special.—Alvaft H. Martin, the Norfolk county Republican leader, just back from Philadelphia, in an interview, tells how it hap-bened that the Bowdenite delegates were recognized by the Committee on Credentials of the National Republican Conver on and the Wise following were thrown He says that Senator Hanna desired for the sake of promoting harmony, to recognize both factions, the Bowdenites recognize both factions, the Bowdenites as delegates, and Dr. Wise as congressman, and this, in effect, was done. He says General Dick, secretary of the committee, voted to seat the Wise delegates, and that they were not seated was a surprise to both sides.

He advises the Wise Ten.

He advises the Wise men to await developments, which he anticipates will be favorable to their cause. The Bowdenites favorable to their cause. The Bowcenites laugh at Mr. Martin's explanation, which, they say, explains nothing, and say he does not yet know what hit him, he was so stunned when he lit.
